Biography

Bos, one of the most accomplished track sprinters in recent racing history, made the switch to the road full-time in 2009. The Dutchman quickly discovered that the transition from the boards to the high-speed roulette of bunch sprints was no walk in the park. Patience finally paid off, and Bos was rewarded with five victories in his first full season racing on the road. Even more is expected from him as he makes the shift to Cervélo in 2010, where he will be guided by lead sports director Jean-Paul Van Poppel, once one of the top sprinters in the world.
